514 FRANCISCA CHO BANTLY Christian scriptural analysis. The exegetical tradition in turn reinforced cosmic dualism by reiterating the ineffability of higher truths, which must then be mediated by the mundane plane of narrative. In China, on the other hand, dualism of the radical and ontological kind seems to be of little philosophical interest.

The narrative richness of the Chinese Ming (1368-1644) novel known as the Hsi-yu chi, or The Journey to the West, presents a daunting challenge to the interpreter. The bewildering array of cultural lore—especially from the three major religious traditions of China (Buddhism, Confucianism, and Taoism)—is so diverse and boldly interwoven that it almost appears as “simply furniture thrown
